By Julius Zancig, Agnes Zancig

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. From the introductory: HOW TO READ THE HANDS. The palmist should sit directly opposite the subject and in a good light; and, I would advise that no third person should distract the attention of either. First of all see what particular type the hand belongs to. Notice the length of fingers in proportion to the palm. Examine first the left hand and then the right, making the latter the basis of your reading. Examine every part of the hand, color, skin, nails, texture, front and back, before speaking. Next, notice the thumb, whether it is long or short, supple or firm. Next, see the palm, whether it is dry, moist, hard, soft or flabby. Next, look at the mounts, observing what ones predominate, then proceed with the lines, beginning with the life line. Always tell the general characteristics before touching upon coming events. Make no predictions before examining carefully the lines on both hands to see that they coincide. Be very frank and sympathetic with your subject. They may be very skeptical and sometimes rude, but that must not...
