Excerpt from Church Philanthropy in New York: A Study of the Philanthropic Institutions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the City of New York St. Paul restored Philemon s runaway slave in time past, to thee unprofitable but now converted, instructed, as to his true possibilities, and profitable to thee. The new relationship of a brother beloved might be expected to cheer and brighten life. (i). In the Book of the Acts we have numerous instances of help extended to the unfortunate (2) which we may classify as Remedial Benevolence; and of new possibilities opened up for the unqualified (3) which may be termed Constructive Benevolence. The early Christians were often cut off from all social advantages; yet the unrested slaves and social outcasts were not forgotten. The Agape (4) described by Pliny (5) had its social side. At the very beginning of the gospel we read of a wedding feast being saved from interruption. We may call such effort Recreative Benevolence.
