This paper is addressed to matters Of law. It is our earnest contention that the Supreme Court erred grievously in the Brown case; that here the Court stepped across the line that divides constitutional interpretation from constitutional amendment. In the fifteen years immediately following adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868, seven court cases were brought to test the continuing power of the States to operate racially separate public schools. In each of these cases, Negro plaintiffs sought to Obtain new rights of equal protection. Precisely the same arguments that were to be presented to the Supreme Court in Brown were presented to the highest courts of Ohio, Indiana, Nevada, California, and New York seventy or eighty...
