He read eagerly in French, German, and English literature. Very few foreigners have so intimate an acquaintance with Carlyle. Emerson is another favourite; in M. Maeterlinck's opinion he is by far the greatest of American writers. Rossetti and Swinburne are among his best-loved poets. Those who possess the first edition of his Scattered Leaves, a volume of lyrics published in 1889 by Lon Vanier in Paris, will remember that among other works mentioned on the title-page as forthcoming, there is a book of Notes sur les Primitives. I asked M. Maeterlinck how he first came to study the mystics. I had always a taste for that kind of reading, he replied, but it was stimulated by the discovery in the public library of Brussels of the ancient and curious Flemish manuscripts of Ruysbroeck. I see that Mr. William Sharp regrets that I did not make an...
