Y., To Boston, Mass., Via Cape Chidley, Labrador, July Third to September Twenty-Sixth, 1926 To my mind the most important single result of all our work was not connected with our scientific observations. We proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that it is possible to carry out serious investigation in the ocean in a small boat. The Chance could be made to lay almost: still during the difficult process of taking subsurface temperatures and soundings, or by the proper trimming of the sails we could tow plankton nets at any desired speed. Previously oceanographic work has only been accomplished at great expense both because of the use of large boats and because of professional crews. In the Chance, because of the design of the boat, we were able to get along perfectly with five men. When, after a particularly hard day's work, we needed sleep, the schooner could be hove to and sailing forgotten until the first man woke up. Again, in a small boat the investigator is in such close contact with the ocean that he gets a very much better chance of studying it than from the deck of a large steamer. That a small boat is as safe at sea in a storm has been shown time and again. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
