Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Optical Requirements of Airplane Mapping A most important portion of the equipment necessary for airplane surveying is the photographic emulsion, and some appraisal must be made of the precision with which the location of an image on a negative may be measured. The limit of resolution of a photographic film is of the order of to mm. In other words, a pair of lines separated this distance on a negative will be recorded as two lines just sufficiently distinct to permit a measurement to be made on each line. The probable error of a single setting on one of these lines will evidently be considerably less than the distance between the two lines. It will be assumed that the probable error of a single setting on a line is 0. 004 mm which is one-fifth to one-sixth of the distance between two lines which are just resolved. This assumption is somewhat arbitrary but, if in error, it is believed that it under estimates the precision with which measurements of fairly well-defined images may be made on a photographic negative. 3 If the probable error of a single setting on a point is 0. 004 mm, the probable error in the determination of a length by a single measurement at each end will be approximately mm.
