Excerpt from Preventive Medicine in the Home, Vol. 5: A Plain Treatise on Hygiene, Sanitation, Prevention of Sickness Knowledge of anatomy and surgery is not essential to intelligent and successful work in caring for the injured. Keep cool. If there are no bleeding points which require your interference, first find out in a general way what sort of an injury the person or each person has sustained, then send a written message to the surgeon if possible. If not, see that the messenger is able to tell just what has happened, so that the surgeon may have the appliances he will need when he arrives.
