Excerpt from Hok?sai: A Talk About Hok?sai, the Japanese Painter, at the Century Club, March 28, 1896 I wish that the question of a talk about Hokusai, or any artist whose form of art is as far away from ours, did not divide into paths which tend away from a common point. Should I appeal to our fellow members who are artists, I need only draw their attention to some point of technique, and they them selves could gauge, as well as myself, the merit of the person whose handiwork, whose language, this was. For then the question of what might almost be called the meaning of the picture could be dropped; a mere movement of a pencil or of a brush, the peculiar manner in which it is used, is to us a proof of the quality of the person who does it. We know that it either takes very great study or very great natural capacity, or both, to make certain movements of the hand over a canvas and a bit of paper. We know, as Dr. Otis knows, just...
