When I left father s house, had any one predicted I would become the thing I am, I would have pronounced such prophet crazy. At that time my only thought was to earn a decent support by honest labour. You know, Hester, I was neither lazy or luxurious. I found work in a distant village in a minister s house. I had met this minister when at my aunt s going to school. He evinced much interest in my studies, and in other respects manifested much kindness. He was the first person in the world who discovered anything in me worthy of interest, worthy of commendation. My first feeling toward him was heart-felt gratitude. If you remember, Hester, father never praised, he always found fault, he disparaged every effort we might make, whatever the direction. I had grown up with a secret belief that I was uncouth and altogether unlovely. This minister, Mr. Jermym, was the first to give me the idea that I was even passably good-looking, or that it was even possible I might win love as more gifted women do. You must also remember, Hester, coming from a minister, this had not only double but quadruple weight with me. We had been brought up to look on preachers as on the Lord s anointed; as the best and truest of men, as but little lower than the angels; as standing between the great and awful...
