Specific gravity of saturated solution at 25 1. C15 Grams CCljCOOII per 100 grams saturated solution 92. 32 Grams CC13C00II per 100 grams water 1, 201. 00 Grams H20 to dissolve 1 gram CCljCOOII 0.0832 Since my supply of trichloracetic acid was nearly exhausted before either of the alcoholic solutions was saturated at 25, I lowered the temperature of the bath to 15 and hoped that an additional crystal of trichloracetic acid in each cylinder would cause the separation of the excess of acid which might possibly be present at the lower temperature. The added crystals dissolved, however, as quickly as before and there was no further possibility of obtaining saturated solutions. Even the aqueous solution to which a little more water had been added contained none of the undissolved acid. Although none of the four solutions were saturated at 15, I thought it would nevertheless be of interest to determine the quantity of acid present in each and thus have figures which would show that the actual solubility was not below the amounts found. In the case of the aqueous solution the following results were obtained:...
