Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, to the People of New-JerseV, as President of the United States The distinguished character of Andrew Jackson, could not fail to attract the attention of his countrymen, in deciding on the pretensions of those who are held up as candidates to till the office of President for the ensuing term of four years. His probity, honor and disinterestedness, in every private relation to society, as a citizen: His liberal education, and early acquaintance with the institutions and laws of the United States, matured by experience, and practically exercised by him in the most important civil departments of government, executive, judicial and legislative: His devoted attachment to the rights of man, and the liberties of his fellow-citizens, proved by all the public actions of a long and useful life: His uniform and constant profession and support of republican principles, such as Washington maintained: His great and splendid services in the late War, when, at the call of his country, he saved defenceless citizens, and even entire states, from savage tomahawks and British bayonets, exalting by a train of glorious victories the character of citizen-soldiers over European mercenaries, and shedding immortal lustre upon the American name, in every quarter of the world: Such high and just pretensions as these, let us repeat, could not fail to fix the attention of a great portion of the American people upon Andrew Jackson, as the successor of that excellent man who now fills the office of president of the United States. He, in fact, is nominated for that high station;...
