Excerpt: . . . distinct as Barbarossas red beard. As a recorder of subjective impressions, of psychological aspects of travel, De Amicis is unrivalled. He is an artist who transmutes, an enchanter who transforms, a travelling philosopher in whom the artistic and elaborative imagination dominates, a colorist steeped in tropical hues, which he scatters broadcast over his picture without its ever losing its own distinctive quality and outline. By nature an enthusiast, he is possessed of the divinus afflatus of wandering, and he is so full of the beauty of his wanderings, that he must give utterance to it as soon as he finds pen. Hence the brilliant phapsodies that have chased each other from the press, with their profusion of landscape, their luxury of description, their prodigal fancy, their poetic imagery. As to that meteor-stream of description and apostrophe--the Constantinople--perhaps the Orient was never so dazzlingly described...

Reviews

This book is great. It is written in simple words and not difficult to understand. I discovered this pdf from my dad and I suggested this ebook to find out.
