Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The American City, Vol. 4: January June, 1911 About worth of new sidewalks have been laid in the city. Corrugated iron cellar doors in the sidewalk have taken the place of the old slippery ones of wood or smooth iron. Most of the business and residence streets have excellent pavements, curbs and crosswalks. With the exception of about feet the old post road is now in good condition, paved at its north end with brick, at its south with macadam. Throughout the principal business thoroughfare and extending into the side streets, all public service wires have been placed in conduits. Free from objectionable overhanging signs and the wooden awnings which used to extend over the sidewalks, with excellent shops and ornamental electric light fixtures, Main Street shows a great improvement over former conditions. These four-armed clusters of globe lights, set on hollow steel poles, are modelled after those in Lincoln, Neb. They are an important feature of the street picture, and will eventually extend from the river to the city limits. The people of Poughkeepsie are prosperous, but not wealthy. There is no bread line, nor is there any widespread extravagance or love of display. The city has a debt of about half of which was incurred at one time in financing the old Poughkeepsie and Eastern Railroad. On the other hand, there is more money (over in its banks than in any other city of its size in the state.
