Excerpt from The Lantern, Vol. 1: March, 1915 to March, 1916 HE most characteristic note in the mental attitude of this day in this country is cocksureness. In a period of discontent marked by many nervous disorders and a militant zeal for reform this cocksureness is lamentable. The result of it is a quick conclusion on every important question that bobs up; and so we have large cults of wild-eyed enthusiasts, such as the anti-vivisectionists and the anti-vaccinationists, going up and down the land with flaming banners; also innumerable movements to make perfect the government of man and remedy the mistakes of God. History is repeating itself. We have the same fertility of projects for the salvation of the world that Emerson discusses in his essay on society in New England in the first half of the last century when the soldiery of dissent were calling in question the authority of all established customs. Then as now society was tormented by agitations born of the limited knowledge of a narrow outlook that makes dogmatists of men. Even at that early...
