The thesis focuses on the antagonism of western media in respect to the uprise of China. The author tries to give reasons for this perspective by analyzing reports of German mass media. , Abstract: China's global influence spreads. Its dynamic development affects our daily life in Western countries. In the past China's economic boom touched daily life in the West most visibly through the 'made-in-China' label on everything from clothes to computers. But in recent years the influence reached a new stage which can't be measured anymore just by widgets and gadgets developments like decreasing consumer prices for textiles, increasing world market prices for natural resources or an increasing global competition influence our daily life....
