Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Report of the Wisconsin Mental Deficiency Survey, 1921: With Recommendations Wisconsin has long ranked among the leading states in provision for its state wards. Its Legislature has time and time again responded to appeals in behalf of better care for the insane, feeble-minded, and epileptic, in a manner deserving great commendation. With two state institutions for the feeble-minded - one being practically complete when one or two new buildings are added, the other now just in the process of construction - it is but in keeping with the Wisconsin spirit that further progress in the direction of meeting and solving the problem presented by this important class of state wards should be made, in the light of more complete knowledge of their actual needs. The public officials of this state, desiring such information as would enable them to map out a comprehensive state-wide program for handling every phase of mental deficiency, decided to undertake, during the year 1920, a state-wide investigation of feeble-mindedness; a survey that would be unprejudiced, sound, scientific, thorough-going, and practical; that would enable the state authorities to know how well they were meeting and solving the menace and burden of feeble-mindedness, and what were the next steps to be taken in order to make their program complete. It was deemed wise to call upon some national organization that had had experience in conducting similar surveys in other states. The National Committee for Mental Hygiene was chosen. The survey has covered a period of twelve months and has extended into the state institutions, county institutions, and public schools, together with a special study of the city of Milwaukee. A report of the Milwaukee survey will be...
