Excerpt from Interim Procedure to Measure the Thermal Performance of Window Systems In principle, the thermal performance of a fenestration can be predicted using heat transfer theory and correlations of experimental data involving convective and radiative heat flow, when the air space dimensions and radiative properties of the window are known and the adjacent air Space s temperature and flow field are specified [rubin, 1985; Siegel and Howell, The ashrae Handbook published by the Merican Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers [ashrae 1985, p. Provides thermal transmittance data for a number of widely used fenestrations based on a specific set of design conditions and recommends their use for determining peak energy loads in sizing heating and cooling equipment. However, because the specific design conditions are more severe than those to which the fenestration are exposed to on a continual basis, ashrae does not recommend the design data to be used for analysis of annual energy usage.
