Not illustrated. 1893 Excerpt: . . . made at the Twenty-Second Congress of German Surgeons held at Berlin in April last stated as follows: Last year fifty eight reports were sent in, numerous over from foreign countries. In all 57, 541 narcoses are reported on, among them 11, 464 with laughing-gas from the Dental Department of the Berlin University. The latter have been entirely discarded. If we add the reports of the previous years to the present we have a total of 157, 815 narcoses; among which 53 deaths took place, or 1 in 2, 900. The relationship of mortality according to the anaesthetic used is about as follows: Chloroform, 1 to 2, 899; chloroform and ether, 1 to 4, 118; bromethyl, 1 to 4, 538; penthal, 1 to 199. With pure ether not a single death is reported among 14, 506 narcoses, the same with the solution of ether, chloroform, and alcohol, recommended by Billroth. The desire to extend the statistics was mentioned, yet the tendency to accept ether as an anaesthetic was strongly endorsed. Especially Professor Kuster, of Marburg, and Trendelenburg, of Bonn, lauded ether highly, whereas KOnig and Bardeleben remained true to chloroform. The question of heart weakness by rhythmic movements externally in the region of the heart to restore animation was mentioned. The latter was endorsed by v. Bardeleben and v. Eisesberg, of Wein. --Med. Record. Bromide Op Strontium In Vomiting. --Coronedi, according to the Eeportorie de Pharmacie, October 10, 1892, has used this agent with great success for...
