Excerpt: .long time in reaching Blewfields, being detained a whole day about Monkey Point, under which we anchored, spending the time pleasantly enough, fishing at bottom for crook-crook, so named by the Moskitos, from the noise the captive makes when taken out of the water: in appearance, it is something between the perch and the wiasse of our coast. We were becalmed the greater part of the next day, and caught more crook-crook for breakfast and dinner. Monkey Point is certainly a very pretty spot, and would, no doubt, make a good harbour with Captain Pirn s proposed improvements. At present, the Carib boats and other small coasters always make for it at the first threatenings of a storm, and are often for safety compelled to remain there for days. About three o clock, passing between Blewfields Bluff and Cassada Cay, we entered Blewfields Lagoon. The bluff is a bold headland, indicating the mouth of the northern entrance of the lagoon. From a distance it looks like an island, being joined to the mainland only by a low narrow strip of mangroves. After sailing half way across the lagoon, we anchored at sunset near a little island covered with broken cocoa-nut trees, called Bluffway Cay, and situated opposite the settlement. What struck me most here was the desolate appearance of the forest, ravaged by a hurricane, which had caused the devastation about a year before (1865). I went ashore at once in the canoe, intending to call on the missionary, Mr....
