THE INDIVIDUAL AND REALITY: AN ESSAY TOUCHING THE FIRST PRINCIPLES OF METAPHYSICS (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 466 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.9in. Excerpt from The Individual and Reality: An Essay Touching the First Principles of Metaphysics This work is not a continuation of my Riddle (1893), but supersedes it. I do not regret having penned the latter. Read with enormous satisfaction by a critic such as Professor William James, it was evidently not written in vain. Some of its novelties are to reappear, in fact, here. But my abandonment of the Monadology and considerable advances in other directions furnish reason that I should start afresh. Those who followed the Monadology with interest may care to learn that I made every effort to save it, but found the task impracticable. After a pause of some fifteen years, I have replaced it with the new form of Idealism which is presented here. The Monads - even the time-honoured human egos - disappear. The work is just an essay on some disputed first principles of metaphysics, and has no pretensions to be called a treatise. Its main aim is to indicate the foundations on which the metaphysics of the future may be built. The riddle before us is that as to the general nature of Reality at large - of the universe. And the solution offered may be regarded as an alternative to that reached by Bradley, also an idealist, in his famous Appearance and Reality: a work which I have had continually in mind.
