I hate looking at you sometimes, looking into the eyes of a woman that hold so many secrets, so many regrets, and so much pain. On the surface, you seem so normal, as if life has been kind to you. But your eyes . . . your eyes, they tell a different story. Your eyes . . . they reveal your unspoken truth. Fragments of a Reflection is a collection of short stories and poetry that narrate the lives of five women who appear to be beautiful, successful, and emotionally strong. The women, however, conscious of their internal truth know they are nothing more than what the mirror says they are - a reporter in search of the person she used to be; a woman who would kill to be loved; a mother grieving the death of her child; a witness unable to stop a deadly assault; a prisoner who finds peace behind bars; and the memory of a promise that couldn't be kept.
