Excerpt from A Sermon Preached at the Installation of Adams Ayer, as Associate Pastor of the Unitarian Society in Charlestown, N. H., June 7, 1855 There are some truths so plain, and so readily assented to, that they are little better than falsehoods in respect to their practical influence. To get them honestly doubted is perhaps the first step to getting them efficiently believed. Among these is the importance of religion to a nation; a truth which secures with about equal readiness our assent and our indifference. To hear it disputed might excite our indignation and sorrow; to hear it affirmed moves only our thoughtless acquiescence. When in the reign of terror, the French nation, so far as their act could do it, deposed God, and abolished public worship, and religious days and usages, the pious instincts of the world were shocked at the monstrous idea of a nation without a church, a people without faith. It was perhaps a happy thing for Christendom, that one nation should substitute antipathy to religion for indifference to it, and...
