These logarithms are also useful on other occasions, where a proportion is to be worked, in which two or more of the terms are sexagesimals, and do not exceed three degrees, or three hours. TABLE XVI. Is intended to facilitate the solution of the problem for finding the latitude of a ship at sea, having the latitude by account, two observed altitudes of the sun, the time elapsed between the observations, measured by a common watch, and the sun's declination. The solution of this very useful problem, on these principles, was first invented by Mr. Cornells Douthet, examiner of the sea officers and pilots by the appointment of the right honourable College of Admiralty at Amsterdam, about the year 1740. He sent his papers and Table, constructed upon them, to the Lords Commissioners of the English Admiralty; and was rewarded with 50l. by the Commissioners of Longitude- It has since been found that it may be usefully applied in the solution of other problems, for which purpose the Column, intitled logarithms, has been extended to 9 hours. In the Nautical Almanac of 1797, 1798, 1799, and 1800, three tables are given, with rules adapted to them, by the Rev. John Brinkley, Andrews Professor of Astronomy, near Dublin, to improve this method, and render it more general; which are also added at the end of these Tables, being Tables . XXIV. and XXV. TABLE XVII. Is a Table of natural sines, which...
