Excerpt from University Gazette, Vol. 10: McGill College; November 17th, 1886 There are various states which alike belong to this general description of mental slavery. It exists wherever any topic of thought is, what they call in Tahiti, tabooed, a phrase which, attention drawn towards that distant region, has rendered not nu familiar. Certain ruling classes in society have placed a religious restriction around particular objects of thought; they have warned the popular mind from off these regions, in order that they might the more effectually subdue it into subserviency to their own dictates. Whoever submits to be debarred from the investigation of any object of human interest, thereby confesses himself a slave - a mental slave. So also is that large class of people who, in a country like this, divided into parties, are so often found playing the game of Follow my leader - men who look not at principles, but persons; pinning their faith upon the sleeve of some one individual who has managed to ingratiate himself with them who denounce what he denounces, and praise what he praises; who...
