Excerpt from Practice and Remedial Reading Exercises in Silent Reading The following exercises intended for use in teaching Silent Reading were worked out by the members of classes under the instruction of Miss Frances Dearborn, during the summer session of the Detroit Teachers College, 1921. It was thought that the most helpful way to apply the benefits derived from the course would be for each teacher to write some practical lessons or drill exercises which she could take into her own class room. This was. Done, each member constructing such as would best fit the needs of the pupils in the grades in which she taught. The theory for the work was obtained from the readings assigned and from the text book, the Twentieth Year Book of the Society for the Study of Education, Part II.
