Paschal: Before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, on the Twenty-Fifth and Twenty-Seventh Days of April, 1870, in the Case of William McGarrahan, (Panoche Grande); With an Index I neither believe in the infallibility of the Pope or the court. I remember, as you remember, how in the construction of that very section which confers upon Congress, whose Judiciary Committee you are, power to make needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States, that tribunal fell into an egregious error, which has cost us rivers of blood and mountains of debt. It was in construing that section that it was claimed, that the territory here described meant that alone which was conceded to the Confederation by Virginia, prior to the adoption of the constitution, and that it left loose and subject to some indefinite notions the vast possessions acquired from Georgia, Spain, France, and Mexico; that there was something owing to that omission which enabled them to proclaim from their high place, that a man born and reared within one of the States of the Union, possessing ordinary intelligence, and having once tasted the sweets of freedom, was not a citizen, and that Congress, with its enlarged power of naturalization, had no power to make him such; that he was something a little lower than a monkey, upon whom could be conferred no power as one of the people of the United States, as a citizen entitled to maintain an action, but who was only known when it was necessary to count him to make up an unequal representation, or to catch him and deliver...
