Bladder cancer is the fourth most commonly diagnosed cancer in men and the ninth most commonly diagnosed cancer in women in the United States. Screening could identify bladder cancer at earlier stages, when it may be more easily and effectively treated. The U. S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) last reviewed the evidence on bladder cancer screening in 2004. The USPSTF commissioned an update of the evidence review in 2009 in order to update its recommendation on screening. Bladder cancer remains an important public health problem, with no improvements in incidence or associated mortality since 1975. There is important uncertainty regarding bladder cancer screening, particularly in higher-risk patients. In addition, since the last USPSTF review, research on urinary biomarkers for diagnosis of bladder cancer has accumulated substantially. The purpose of this report is to systematically evaluate the current evidence on screening for bladder cancer. In the United States, over 90 percent of bladder cancers are transitional cell carcinomas, 5 percent are squamous cell carcinomas, and less than 2 percent are adenocarcinomas. Bladder cancer is typically staged according to the American Joint...
