A supper of shell-meat (shell-fish seven a penny) 6 grains of red cinders are my jewels. And I have a purple-cheeked lady--(Great cheeks as purple earth of a rare Planet) To-night I will lazily call myself Frances The New and you Bitter-sweet Mary, my Sister. But Death delayed, and life became more and more unbearable. She at last found rooms that she liked--overlooking the river in Cheyne Walk. From there she steadily refused to move. Some change was strongly urged by a doctor brought in by a distracted friend. This doctor held out a long life to Frances; and, as life as she then lived it was intolerable, she at last half consented to go away for a time. The where and when were under consideration; hurry seemed both unnecessary and undesirable. What happened at the end no one can know. The idea of a long life may have shocked her to desperation; the thought of a change and the probability of some control, however slight, perhaps frightened her. Most probable of all, the idea may have occurred to her that never again would she be free to live and die as she willed; and this decided her. She wrote, in her usual hand, I go to happy Death --and died by her own act. I Of She died on October i, 1915; her last words to those who helped her at the end, Thank you, dear friends!.
