Excerpt: .sits upon a bad return, to keep his seat, in spite of a well-grounded petition and a trial by a committee chosen by ballot: but may not the thing be atchieved by a man of true vigilance, insinuation, and delicate artifice? Let no, man, having before him an object of such consequence as a seat in parliament and the discharge of the legislative functions, hesitate to put in practice the necessary arts. Since his ultimate objectis so great and good, it cannot be his duty to bnggle about the means. Get into.the house, fairly if you can; but, at all rates, get into the house; a Once in the house, suffer neither Heaven nor Hell to exclude you from it! On the other hand, the motives to petition against a return, are natural and strong. Is a candidate to give up his cause, even...
