It was built on a loose stone foundation, with sufficient slope to give it stability, but during or just before the late war about 800 cubic meters of material, including part of the slope of the foundation, were excavated by the Spanish authorities for the purpose of anchoring a torpedo machine. As a result of this work the foundation caved in and a portion of the masonry broke off and toppled into the bay. Authority for the necessary repairs, with an allotment of $1,006, was received June 26, 1899. The repairs consisted of removing the stones that had fallen into the bay, driving an underpinning of hardwood piles, which were cut off and capped with heavy timbers below low-water line, and rebuilding the masonry in its former shape. The work was commenced July 1 and completed August 19, 1899. Expenses incurred: Labor $709.06 Materials...
