Original Drawings of I/ze Dull/z and Flemis/I Srkools in t/ze Print Room of I/ze Slate I/lluseum al Amsterdam. Selected by the Director, E. IV. Moes. (The Hague: M. Nijhoff; London: Williams Norgate.) Parts VII.-X., 1; r 14s. net each.--The first half-dozen instalments of this work having already been noticed in these columns, it only remains for us to repeat, now that the concluding instalments have made their appearance, that the unique series of reproductions constituting the work cannot fail to be of the utmost value alike to the connoisseur interested in the great masters of the Low Countries and to the art student. To the latter, especially, their importance cannot be overrated, on account of the insight they give into the many and diverse methods pursued by these old masters. They show, too, that these masters, numbering nearly a hundred and counting among them most of those who have made the Dutch and Flemish Schools famous for all time, assiduously cultivated the art of drawing from nature as a foundation for their permanent work, giving point in this respect to Carlyle s definition of genius as an infinite capacity for taking pains. In our previous notice we referred to the numerous examples among these drawings which show the application of water-colour in varying degrees as being of particular interest, and in these last instalments further examples of this are given, among them being some (as, for instance, Constantijn Hughes In...
