That s the extraordinary part of it. You speak most dispassionately of all sorts of moral lapses but it s only your brain that s concerned; never your body. Revette. For the reason that I have met no one that combines beauty, that is the introduction, with understanding, that is the invitation to the banquet, and intelligence that pours the wine. And when I shall find this rara avis, what shall he see in me? Marion. Well, I had some arguments that seemed excellent when I came in; but arguments that would appeal to any normal woman don t even interest you. Revette. Oh yes, they do. They interest me very much. You see I seem so natural to myself until I hear someone speak as you speak and then I begin to wonder whether I m mad, or whether the...
