Dauntingly there are almost as many books generalist and specialist on the subject as there are varieties of textile. In Threads and voices the attempt is to interpret the textile through the contemporary craftspeople that make it including the voices of designers and craft NGOs who work with them. The emphasis is on contemporary pieces and practice contrasted with old heirlooms and traditions. Also analysed are the sociological and economic causes of the demise of certain traditions. The articles in Threads and Voices describe textiles and skills still used by people for their own purposes rather than the museum pieces of yesteryear. The common thread is craftspeople organizations activists and designers with whom Dastkar has worked over the years. The focus shifts from museum antiques and master craftspersons to embroideries and weaves made in villages today as part...
