THE SABR REVIEW OF BOOKS, VOLUME 1: A FORUM OF BASEBALL LITERARY OPINION

Society for American Baseball Research. Paperback / softback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, The Sabr Review of Books, Volume 1: A Forum of Baseball Literary Opinion, Society for American Baseball Research, Society for American Baseball Research (Sabr), In this issue . . . Baseball lives in all seasons. So the first issue of "The SABR Review "takes a look at two of the newest works on non-regular-season baseball: "A Baseball Winter" and (on Spring Training) "The Short Season." We cover Jim Kaplan's diary of '83 season, too. But we don't forget the history, with reviews of the two latest books on two of baseball's prime movers, Ban Johnson and A.G. Spalding, discussed by A.D. Suehsdorf and Luke Salisbury. And what are the newest of the great baseball writers saying? In this issue we review the latest by Bill James, Roger Kahn, Peter Gammons, and Dan Okrent. Plus a special treat: a brief reminiscence of the immortal Red Smith by his teammate on the All-Time Great-Writers Team, Bob Broeg. Two of the national pastime's oldest skills are also its most overlooked. Jack Carlson and Frank Boslett analyze what Bill Curran has to say about defense in "Mitts," and what Kevin Kerrane learned about putting the "Dollar Sign on the Muscle." Most of us started loving baseball at an early age, and most remember the almost sinfully delicious feeling when we discovered that we could actually "read" about it, too. That's why this issue takes a special three-way look at those early books that first forged the magical link between the game and the imagination for many of us. Leverett Smith overviews what juvenile baseball literature has been about since its beginnings. Jack Kavanagh tells us about a star, Baseball Joe Matson, who lasted 16 years (and outlasted a writer or two). Next, Phil Bergen...
