Not illustrated. 1896 Excerpt: . at the university in at least two groups will be designated as Class AA. LIMITATION Ambitious principals and school boards always desire their schools to rank high on any accredited list published in the state. This, although in itself commendable, has produced an unfortunate tendency. It is a common thing at present in Nebraska for graded schools with only a few teachers to undertake more high school work than the district can afford, and in most of these cases more than can be done well. There are schools of from four to twelve teachers undertaking to give four full years of high school instruction. This of necessity withdraws attention and financial support from the lower grades, which benefit more people in the community than do the higher grades. No high school can be permanently strong unless supported by efficient work in the grades below. It has been deemed necessary, therefore, not only to require schools to come up to a certain standard of high school work, but to discourage them from undertaking too much. This plan will, therefore, be strictly followed in determining the number of credits or points to which each school is entitled; schools will be limited as to the number of credits or points allowed, according to the number of teachers employed in the district, except in special cases and after special investigation. Graded schools of two or three teachers will belong to Class D (see above); graded schools of three to six...
