By John Yurechko

iUniverse, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Head Lines: Poems and Passages is a collection of poems that were written to be read out loud, either alone, or with one another, or in a group. They chronicle the life and experiences of author John Yurechko. They are written in a style and format that lends itself to reading out loud, with line breaks, BIG VOICES in ALL CAPITALS, and whispers in italics, pauses, rushes, vocalizations, etc. These visual guides are as much a part of the writing as the words themselves. Head Lines is a collection of the author's writings spanning fifty years. He reflects on topics ranging from his childhood in a steel town, to life in California, Virginia and North Carolina, and to everyday events that he describes in these poems and passages. Raking Leaves . . . Then to the Master's own backyard: there are rake hands on the Rovers of Mars, to scrape deep into all the sustaining planets. And rakes in Voyager's arms, sweeping up the swirling mess of the galaxies, raking time and space so the heavens will look gloriously...
