The days had come when time should be no more: And Earth, pale Empress, saw her crumbling throneTottering on the dark and lurid vergeOf fell Destructions fearful precipice. Sun, moon, and stars were blotted from the sky;And darkness visible was over allA dim and ghastly shroud. All sounds were hushed. All living things, save one, had vanishedIn that dark night of Death. One only thoughtRose dominant oer a racked and dying world. Twas the last day of Earth, - upon whose breastThe dead lay heavy; but not yet had comeThe hour that lit the fatal funeral pyre;For Life yet lingered where Deaths steed had passed, And left the earth a vast uncharnelled grave. One only, fearless and confiding, bravedThe universal doom; - one, only, metThe pale Steed and its Rider, dying not; -One only passion mocked Destructions art. Twas Love, the ever trustful and the true, -The star that leads to Heaven!Amid the dead, Who peopled all that mighty sepulchre, A pallid woman sat, watching aboveA soulless form of clay that lay beside. She heeded not the darkness that had madeAll Earth a Silence and a Dread; - saw noughtBeyond the narrow circle where she sat. Her all of life was there!A ray of lightStreamed sudden from on high; marking the spotWhere that pale woman sat, and watched, and prayed. Borne downwards on the ray, a stately shape, A winged angel came, and lightly stoodAbout the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
