As early as possible I should teach the ohild to remove all traces of disorder as soon as he had finished playing with the paper. And I should be very particular to give the paper to the ohild myself, saying, Baby may tear this, and always have it understood that he must ask me what may be torn. I think it helps teach the child to be careful with books, for he soon learns to make a distinction. Some of the mothers looked relieved and some skeptical after the foregoing remarks. The next speaker was An Anxious, Nervous Mother: I have a boy of two years. Ha will take his father s books out of the bookcase in spite...
