The Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, Regarding the System of Education Pursued at the High School There are two principal avenues to knowledge - the study of words and the study of things. But words are but the arbitrary signs of ideas, and have no value independent of those ideas. To account the mere knowledge of words, therefore, as wisdom, is to mistake the cask for the wine, and the casket for the gem. I say all this, because knowledge in words is often extolled beyond its just merits, and put for all wisdom, while knowledge of things, especially of the productions of nature, is derided as if it were mere folly. - Kirby and Spence's Introduction to Entomology, vol. I. P. 25, 26. the present state of society. But we have been so long accustomed to attach a high value to classical education as the medium of liberal knowledge, without reference to the change that has taken place in Europe within the last two hundred years, that it still...
