Thus the data obtained by the writer are not only in harmony with the theory that albinism, red-eye, and intensity form a series of triple allelomorphs, but can be explained on no other basis, barring the possibility just noted. DILUTION. Such color varieties as agouti, black, brown, yellow, etc., are sharply distinct from each other. They segregate from crosses without producing intergrades and in unforced agreement with Mendelian expectation. In contrast with these discontinuous variations are the continuous variations in the intensity of color of each main color variety. Thus, among the yellows, there are all gradations from a pale cream to an intense red. Among the agoutis, there are the pale silver agoutis, the intense golden agoutis, and the intermediate yellow agoutis. There are all grades of dilute blacks known to the fanciers as blues, for which term, as...
