Excerpt: . . . for waging war until unconditional surrender, would after a short struggle accept the annihilation of a considerable part of its naval and air forces and the whole of its power in the Far East. Perhaps the most savage indictment is that of Haruo Tohmatsu and H. P. Willmott: No state or nation has ever been granted immunity from its own stupidity. But Japans defeat in World War II was awesome. The coalition of powers that it raised against itself, the nature of its defeat across an entire ocean, and the manner in which the war ended represented an astonishing and remarkable, if unintended, achievement on the part of Japan. Was the Japanese decision for war in 1941 just a matter of stupidity Can it be dismissed as simply a cultural puzzle Is it beyond comprehension Thucydides famously explained the desire of ancient Athens to retain its empire by declaring that fear, honor, and interest were among three of the strongest motives. Realist theories in international politics focus on calculations of power and interest as the primary drivers of state behavior, and in so doing tend to discount factors, such as ideology and pride, that distort rational analysis of risks and rewards. Ideology and pride, however, are central to understanding the international behavior of many states, including Japan from 1931 to 1945. For some states, including Imperial Japan and Nazi Germany, ideology and national interest were inseparable. Indeed, the influence of ideology on the foreign policy decisionmaking of the great...
