

LOST BURGUNDY: THE BOOK OF ASH #4

By Gentle, Mary

Eos, New York, 2000. Mass Market Paperback. Condition: New. Donato Giancola (cover) (illustrator). First mass market printing; December 2000. Condition is new (though the pages and inside covers have begun to go light brown); not a remaindered, library, or book club edition. -- Dijon, the once-proud capital of Burgundy, has been pounded into near-submission. The merciless soldiers of the Visigoth Empire stand hungrily at the gate, and at their fore, the beautiful, deadly Faris, unwittingly bred to be the instrument of a machine intelligence that seeks the end of humanity. The sun gutters weakly overhead like a dying candle, as the Wild Machines once again flex their dark, demonic power. Ash, like her warrior twin, hears the Wild Machines' call - but unlike the Faris, Ash will not be their tool. For within Dijon's crumbling walls a fragile hope has bloomed: one who bears in her royal blood the ability to hold the dread Machines at bay. Size: 16mo - over 5¾" - 6¾" tall.
