Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Handbook of Vancouver Island HE greatest of the visible resources of Vancouver Island is its timber. Its forests are among the finest in the world in respect to the size, stand and economic value of the several varieties of trees. Sometimes the assertion is made that they hold the first place, but it is not necessary to employ in respect to them language that might seem to savour of exaggeration. Generally speaking the whole land surface below the snow-line and excepting the relatively small areas which have been cleared for cultivation, is clad with trees of more or less, but always of considerable commercial value. The chief woods are; Douglas Fir, often referred to as Oregon Pine from the fact that it first became known to the timber trade through exports from the State of Oregon. It is the chief of all the woods of the Pacific Coast Of North America. Its habitat extends from Mexico on the south to the northern boundary Of British Columbia on the north, or over a range of square miles. It is unknown east of the Rocky Mountains; Western Red Cedar, Western Hemlock and Silver Spruce. All these are giant timbers. In addition there are various species of Pines, and Balsam Firs, well-adapted and used for commercial purposes, the latter being employed in the manu facture Of pulp. Maples and Alde rs grow to a considerable size, but though useful for certain purposes do not form as yet a part Of the commercial output of the mills. The damage done by fire to the Island forests has been relatively small owing to the high general average precipitation, and the density Of the foliage which retards...
