The Tale of the Children of Lamech. Not yet the memory of Eden lost
Had faded from the tribes whose scatterd paths Threaded the plain of Shinar. In their veins Still ran the juices of the bitter fruit
Borne by the tree of life: so centuries
Must come to men ere yet their wasting strength
Bade them remember that the Lord had said That dust from Earth must unto Earth return. And generations seven from the loins
Of Adam sprang and peopled the new land
