Excerpt from Weaver College Catalog The first session of the Weaverville School was held in the Conference House. This building was erected for the meeting of the Holston Annual Conference which convened at Weaver ville in 1836. A neighborhood school was conducted in this rude structure until 1854, when patronage had grown to such an extent that a new frame building was erected and known as Temperance Hall. At this time the school became a boarding school and drew patronage from the mountain section. This building was destroyed by fire in 1872. In the same year, largely through the efforts of the local community, a brick building was erected, and the school was chartered as a college. In 1883 the property was deeded to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and since that time has been conducted as one of the institutions of the church. In 1912 the school was reorganized as a Junior College, and the curriculum was arranged accordingly. The diploma of the school admits the graduates of Weaver College to the Junior Class of standard colleges without examination. In 1915 the General Assembly of North Carolina granted the college a new charter, greatly enlarging its powers and privi leges. The college is now controlled by a. Board of trustees, consisting of fifteen members nominated by the board of trustees and elected by the Western North Carolina Conference.
