Excerpt from The Foxhound of the Twentieth Century: The Breeding and Work of the Kennels of England Foxhound breeding to-day rests on the source of purity of blood derived from four great kennels, which have always been the cherished possession of the same families, bred for generations on the same lines, and never dispersed. Little wonder is it that such fountain-heads are regarded by fox hound breeders as a National institution, and a deep debt of gratitude is due to the Dukes of Rut land at Belvoir, the Dukes of Beaufort at Bad minton, the Earl of Yarborough at Brocklesby, and the Earl Fitzwilliams. Noted packs of hounds have been built up from these sources, to come and go, as owners changed and dispersal sales took place, but the history of fox-hunting is inseparably linked with the history of the great county families of England, who were the pioneers of the Chase.
