Excerpt from The Nautilus, Vol. 15: A Monthly Journal Devoted to the Interests of Conchologists; May, 1901, to April, 1902 I am indebted for specimens of this shell to Mr. Hart, at one time Superintendent of Public Gardens and Plantations in Jamaica, and now occupying a similar position in Trinidad, by whom they were collected at the government cinchona plantations in the mountains of Saint Andrew, about feet above sea level. One of the specimens being alive, I obtained the radnla, but failed in securing the buccal plate. The teeth are of the type common to MM. Crosse Fischer s first group A. Of Cylindrellas. The animal is very small in proportion to the shell. It is spiral behind the man tle, short, of a pearly-white color, slightly mixed with green, and marked with close-waved, narrow, longitudinal brown lines, not ex tending to the lapping of the foot; head short, with a simple labial appendage, apparently incapable of much projection eye peduncles short, slender, of a deep bistre color, except on the lips, where the color is like that of the body; eyes very black, placed 011 the bulb shaped tips of the peduncles; tentacles short and very slender; foot broad and lance-shaped behind. The animal is very active for a Cylindrella. It progresses by extending forward the forepart of the foot and drawing the afterpart up to it in a sort of wave. Part of the shell drags lightly on the ground and is carried forward with each fresh advance of the foot.
