HSRC Press, South Africa, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. The unprecedented United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325, established in 2000, radically addressed what we knew about warfare-that civilians and especially women were increasingly targeted-and called for a sea change in the ways women should engage in any rebuilding processes- including conflict management, governance, and peacebuilding efforts. Deconstructing Women, Peace and Security offers a critical review and analysis of many gender-based efforts implemented since 2000, including empowerment policies, strategies, and an in-depth study of four particular cases. It calls out the need for conceptualizing gender as a social structure in policy construction. It assesses the ` good intentions of policies designed and implemented with core beliefs they will be good for women. It provides an important case-based analysis of what is (and is not) working.The book s critical review of the rights and protection of women and empowerment efforts is organized around initiatives in nearly a dozen African countries. The data are also informed (and confirmed) outside the continent in Nepal, Sri Lanka, Egypt and Indonesia. The authors have unique expertise and provide solid case-based analysis of many empowerment initiatives.Promoting women s empowerment has become an unequivocal objective of many governments, development organizations and international agencies. While important initiatives have been put in place, education campaigns-for men and women-regarding human rights, gender empowerment and efforts to create sustainable peace are still sorely needed. The book offers case-based data to engender inclusivity in all peace and security processes.
