Electrical Engineering 4 years These universities are generally situated in places of considerable importance, and are not usually founded in cities having populations of less than 100,000 inhabitants. They enjoy at the present time an extraordinary prosperity and attract numerous students from other countries. No other institutions seem to have been more important in promoting the great industries of Germany. They illustrate Germany s patient toil and tenacity in seeking success in the industrial world by rational means and scientific methods. They are institutions devoted to the adaptation of science and education to the necessities of economic life. Emperor William takes a very active interest in them. At the inauguration ceremony for the school in Dantzig, October 6, 1904, after praising the magnificent installation, he expressed his determination to increase the number of...
