Excerpt from Evangeline: A Tale of Acadie; With a Biographical Sketch, Introduction and Notes; And a Sketch of Longfellow s Home Life Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was the second son of the family, which contained four sons and four daughters. He took his name from his mother s brother, Lieutenant Henry Wadsworth, whose heroic death was a fresh and tender memory in the family. Two years and a half before, on the night of September 4, 1804, he had been second in command of the bomb - ketch Intrepid, which was fitted up as an infernal, and sent stealthily into the harbor of Tripoli to blow up the enemy s ?eet. The officers and crew were to apply the match and escape in the boats; but when the Intrepid was still a quarter of a mile from her destination, the watching men in the American ?eet out side saw a sudden line of light; in a moment a column of fire shot up from the vessel, and with a tremendous explo sion bombs burst in every direction, and the masts and rigging...
